OHIO BANK ROBBERY FRUSTRATED AS ONE BANDIT IS CAPTURED

Village Marshal Traps
Trio Breaking In Mantua Bank

MANTUA, O., Sept. 17.—Frustrating an attempted robbery of the Mantua bank here today, Marshal William Powell captured one of the trio of alleged burglars while the two others escaped toward Cleveland in a speedy roadster.

Cleveland authorities were notified and radio squads were posted at all eastern highway entrances to the city.

Powell surprised the suspected robbers as they were crawling through a window in the back of the bank building. The remaining two fled while Powell attempted to halt them by firing several shots.

None of the suspected robbers had gained entrance to the bank, authorities said. A search of the premises revealed no burglar tools. It was believed, however, that the escaped pair carried the equipment as they fled.

The captured man, whose parents are said to live in Mantua, refused to name his accomplices. He admitted, police said, that he met them in Cleveland last night and that they had gone to Mantua with the intention of robbing the bank.

CAPONE FACES VAGRANCY LAW

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—"Scarface" Al Capone, overlord of Chicago's gangs, and twenty-four other gangsters branded as "public enemies" by the crime commission, were being sought today on vagrancy warrants sworn out by Municipal Judge John H. Lyle.

Chicago's entire police force, consisting of 6,000 men, were ordered to join the hunt for Capone and the others. The warrants make it possible for the state to proceed against the gangsters under the 1874, a forgotten statute revived during the latest drive on racketeers and gunmen.

Danny Stanton, Capone aid and one of those named in the warrants, was captured yesterday after a chase and will be arraigned today.

SHEER DRAMA MARKS BATTLE OF GIANTS IN NATIONAL LOOP

Present Series May Decide Pennant Winner In League

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—For sheer drama, this baseball series they are staging before a yowling mob over at Brooklyn's Tom Thumb ball yard between the St. Louis Cardinals and the Brooklyn Robins is the real thing, a pure unadulterated thriller.

The National League pennant race, for all anybody knows, may be riding on this epic series at Ebbets Field. Maybe the flag is riding on today's game, or on a single pitched ball. For these two clubs now locked in a death struggle, are as close as a couple of spoons.

St. Louis, in first place, has won eighty-three ball games and lost sixty for a percentage of .580 whereas Brooklyn has won eighty-four and lost sixty-one for a mark of .579.

Ebbets Field can't hold the crowd that wants to be in at the death in this "little world series." They turned them away in droves yesterday and probably will again today—and tomorrow, the big game between the two clubs. The normally dignified city of Brooklyn has gone cuckoo, and nothing can be done about it until the question of the hour is settled, namely:

Which club—St. Louis or Brooklyn—will face the Philadelphia A's in the world series?

Although the faltering Chicago Cubs are only a game and a half behind the lead, the Brooklyn fans have ceased to worry about them. And even though the fourth place New York Giants are still mathematically in the running, Brooklyn has tolled over them the long count.

St. Louis in the first game of this thriller series, violently jerked the Robins out of first place just as they were reaching confidentially for their twelfth straight victory. It took great baseball to do it, the Cards winning 1 to 0 in ten innings in what was perhaps the most exciting contest of the National League season. It was a remarkable pitchers' battle between Bill Hallahan and "Dazzy" Vance, a game featured by a dozen scintillating plays and a few that actually were hair raising.

The Cards proved that they are great "money players," and so did the Robins, for that matter. It was anybody's game to the final out. Neither team showed the slightest signs of cracking. The Cards, with such ex-world series players as Frisch, Douthett, Hefley and Bottomley in the lineup looked a great deal more formidable than did the Cubs on their recent invasion of Ebbets Field.

It wasn't the defeat that hurt the Robins so much, but rather the manner in which the courageous Cardinals snatched the game out of the fire. The Cards' last stand, with defeat staring them in the face, was drama supreme.

BANDIT SHOTS GUARD WHEN ATTEMPTED JAIL BREAK IS FRUSTRATED

Brother Of Famous
Whittemore Leads
Daring Plot

BALTIMORE, Sept. 17.—Rawlins V. Whittemore is moping in a solitary cell today. Yesterday he tried to emulate his brother, Richard Reese Whittemore, master bandit of this city and New York, by shooting his way free of the Maryland penitentiary. "Dick" Whittemore escaped the prison in 1925 by killing a guard but was returned and hanged on August 13, 1926, for the murder.

The plan didn't work. The rope with which Whittemore and eight other convicts, including three "lifers" hoped to scale the high wall didn't catch its hooks on top of the wall and Whittemore blundered, prison officials said, when he held up Guard Arthur F. Owen with a wooden pistol. He poked the ingeniously fashioned "weapon" into Owen's side and attempted to seize his gun. In the tussle the guard's pistol went off and the report of the pistol attracted other guards. Owen fell groaning with a bullet wound in his stomach. His condition is serious.

Whittemore and three companions ran across the yard and fired several wild shots at guards, while five other prisoners, who had planned to join Whittemore in the break, took refuge behind a boiler in the laundry.

Whittemore is serving 21 years for robbing a bank. None of the other thousands of prisoners, including many lifers, accepted the occasion to stage a rebellion.

CANADA'S NEW TARIFF RATES HURT IMPORTS

Increases Of About 25 Per Cent Are Put In Effect

OTTAWA, Sept. 17.—A severe jolt to imports from the United States was faced today in the increased tariff rates on 130 articles as proposed by Premier R. B. Bennett and made effective today. The premier offered the increased tariffs, the highest in the history of Canada, in a bill to the house committee on ways and means as a method of relieving unemployment in Canada.

The premier said the increased rates were only temporary and designed to aid 25,000 workers without jobs in Canada. He indicated after the unemployment period passes revisions would be made in the tariff rates.

Iron, steel, cotton and woolen textiles, silks, shoes, paper, copper bars, gasoline and agricultural implements are the heaviest hit in the new proposals. All are subjected to increases of about 25 per cent.

To safeguard consumers, provision was made that if manufacturers increase the prices of certain articles, the cabinet may reduce or remove the duties. Premier Bennett, however, said assurance has been given that no increase in prices to consumers would be made.

DOCTOR WOUNDED DURING GUN BATTLE

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—Dr. Cleveland C. MacLane was near death today from a bullet that struck him during a three gun family battle which climaxed a birthday party.

The gun battle was between James Thompson, 63, his son Roy, and Lawrence, a son of the latter. The elder Thompson was placed under arrest and his son was treated for a bullet wound in his scalp.

because the latter had gone to a Michigan town since the crime and for the past five years had lived the life of a respected family man.

Rosenberg's release ended Cutten's relentless eight year search for and prosecution of the nine men who plotted and executed the robbery. Five members of the gang left Cutten, his wife, his brother Harry and several servants locked in a vault to die after they looted the house of $20,000 worth of liquor and jewelry. A servant released them from the vault before they suffocated.

Rosenberg surrendered July 25 and admitted planning the robbery. "It is not necessary to send Rosenberg to prison to satisfy the ends of justice, in view of the change in his mode of life," Cutten told Circuit Judge Frank Shepherd through State's Attorney Chauncey Reed yesterday.

DEMOCRATS FOLLOW REPUBLICAN LEAD; PLATFORM ADOPTED

Pleds Enforcement,
Economy To Reduce
Tax Burdens

COLUMBUS, O., Sept. 17.—Prohibition will not be an issue in the Ohio November election insofar as the party platforms go. Like their Republican brothers, the Democrats at their state convention here yesterday adopted a platform completely ignoring the wet-dry issue but pledging enforcement of all laws.

There was no discord between leading candidates on the Democratic state ticket, George White, Marietta, the gubernatorial nominee, is "bone dry" and Robert Bulkley, Cleveland, the senatorial nominee, is "wringing wet," yet each praised the other in their speeches before the platform convention.

The only discordant note in an otherwise harmonious convention emanated from Charles Hubbell, Cleveland, the party nominee for judge of the state supreme court. Cat calls greeted Hubbell when he arose and announced that he "cannot respect a decision to pussyfoot" on the prohibition question. Hubbell is a rabid dry.

Bulkley has made it plain that he does not intend to ignore the prohibition issue in his own personal campaign for election. He was nominated on an anti-prohibition platform in the primary election, and while for the sake of party harmony he agreed not to press for inclusion of a wet plank in the state ticket platform, he said in his speech before the convention that he was sorry the Democratic party took no definite stand for repeal of the dry law.

As adopted the platform pledges the party candidates to:

1. Economize in governmental costs, both state and local, and to reduce tax burdens.
2. Return to the classified budget system of making appropriations so that the taxpayers shall have full knowledge of all financial transactions of the government.
3. Stand for respect for law upon the part of all, but demand that enforcement shall be honest, impartial, fair and just.
4. Sympathetic and adequate consideration of the needs of the underprivileged children, particularly the deaf, blind and crippled.
5. Definitely opposed to state income tax, general sales tax, increase in gasoline tax or any other new form of taxes which will exact

STAR PITCHER IS KIDNAPED

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—Flint Rhem, one of the pitchers on whom the St. Louis Cardinals are relying to win the pennant was sleeping in a hotel here today under orders from the manager of the club, Gabby Street, that he remain undisturbed until noon.

Rhem reported to Street last yesterday after having disappeared for twenty-four hours. Rhem said two armed men had taken him to a roadhouse on Monday night and poured liquor down his throat all evening, according to Street.

The Cardinals' manager then ordered Rhem to "get some sleep." Street told International News Service today that the matter was closed as far as he was concerned and that he would take no action against Rhem and that there would be no investigation of the affair.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 17.—The French trans-Atlantic flyers, Major Dieudonne Coste and Lieutenant Maurice Bellonte, took off from Cleveland airport for Detroit at 9:04 a. m. today on the third leg of their goodwill tour of the nation, after having paid homage to the memory of the late ambassador to France Myron T. The route of the aviators today will carry them over Akron, Columbus, Dayton and Toledo. The flyers will stop at Indianapolis for lunch. They expected to arrive at the Indiana capitol about noon and to take off at 1:30 p. m. on their trip to Detroit.

A tremendous ovation was accorded the flyers when they arrived here yesterday. They were formally welcomed at city hall by Mayor John D. Marshall and later were taken on a whirlwind parade through downtown streets. At Lake View Cemetery the French flyers placed a wreath on the grave of Ambassador Herrick. The French aces were honored guests at a public banquet last night.

Each of the flyers was presented with a silver plaque at the banquet as a permanent memento of their visit here.

Among those who joined hands with the French aviators across the speaker's table last night was Lieut. Albert F. Hezenberger, who with Lieut. Lester J. Maitland made the first flight over the Pacific Ocean from San Francisco to Honolulu in June 1927.

DIVIDE VICTORIES IN SEVERAL STATES IN TUESDAY VOTING

Republican Drys And Democrat Wets Win;
La Follette Wins

By International News Service
Drys and anti-prohibitionists divided victory in six elections Tuesday, returns by International News Service indicated today.

In Massachusetts, former Senator William M. Butler, avowed dry, was leading Eben S. Draper, anti-prohibitionist in a close race for the Republican senatorial nomination.

In Wisconsin Philip LaFollette won over Governor Kohler for the Wisconsin gubernatorial nomination.

Mrs. Ruth Pratt Republican congresswoman, was renominated in New York.

Republican dry candidates, with few exceptions, were winning over anti-prohibition candidates in congressional contests, incomplete returns showed.

Connecticut Republicans named Lieutenant Governor Rogers, a dry, as candidate for chief executive.

In Delaware former Senator Thomas F. Bayard, an anti-prohibitionist, was chosen by the Democratic party for the United States senate. A dry law repeal plank was adopted.

Ohio Democrats did not consider prohibition in their platform.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—An overwhelming progressive victory in Wisconsin and a confusing series of wet and dry victories in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Delaware and New York early today featured the returns from the last state primaries and conventions prior to November's elections.

The La Follette family demonstrated its control over the Republican party in Wisconsin when Philip F. LaFollette, aided by his brother, Senator Robert F. La Follette, won the Republican nomination for governor. La Follette defeated the incumbent governor, Walter J. Kohler, with the nomination equivalent to election.

The Massachusetts result was surprising with drys capturing the Republican nominations and wets winning the Democratic contests. William M. Butler, friend of reform, President Coolidge and former Republican national chairman, appeared to have won the Republican senatorial nomination as a dry. Governor Frank G. Allen, a dry Republican, likewise seemed to have won a renomination. The Bay State Democrats however voted wet, with Marcus A. Coolidge running ahead for the senatorial nomination and Joseph B. Ely for the gubernatorial nomination. Both Coolidge and Ely were wet in campaign.

In Connecticut, the Republicans in convention nominated Ernest E. Rogers, a dry, for the governorship but turned right around and adopted a wet plank on prohibition. The convention, although favoring a plank for repeal of the eighteenth amendment, as the Democrats had previously approved, declared for restoration of state control of liquor sales. This plank was advocated by J. Henry Rowack, Republican national committee member and friend of President Hoover. Reports had it that he threatened to resign his post if the repeal of prohibition were demanded.

In Delaware, the Democratic state convention went dripping wet. It first nominated former Senator Thomas F. Bayard and then adopted a platform, calling for repeal of the eighteenth amendment. This

"The Bible in the Public School" was the topic of an address by Mrs. A. C. Turrell at the September meeting of the McCalland W. C. T. U. at the home of Mrs. John Harner, Upper Bellbrook Pike, last week. Mrs. Turrell said: "We send our children to school to be educated to become good citizens. Impromptu talks concerning their vacation trips were given by Mrs. Myrtle Manor, Mrs. Dossie Beal and Mrs. Dena Harner. The retiring president, Mrs. Hazel Manor, presided at the meeting and devotions were in charge of Mrs. W. A. McCall.

The organization has revived the custom of giving spoons to members, who have recently married, and spoons were presented to Mrs. Elton Haines and Mrs. Moore at the meeting. BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

God's Idea of Marriage—Jesus said unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female, And said, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and they twain shall be one flesh? Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. —Matthew 19:4, 5, 6.

THE VOTE IN GERMANY

The outstanding feature of the German elections was the gain made by the extremist parties in the reichstag, where the Communists increased their seats from 54 to 76 and the German Fascists jumped their membership from 12 to 107. Communists and Fascists alike are enemies of the republic. Otherwise they have nothing in common. The Fascists want a dictator. The Communists belong to the Third International. A long period of depression and distress, aggravated by the inability of the moderate parties to unite on a comprehensive domestic program, worked in favor of the extremist candidates at the polls.

The steps by which Germany moved inexorably to Sunday's elections were short and distinct. After the general election of May, 1928, Chancellor Mueller formed his grand coalition, a ministry of personalities gathered together to put over the Stresemann foreign policies. As soon as it had ratified the Young plan and brought about the evacuation of the Rhineland, Chancellor Mueller's cabinet fell. The Social Democrats split with the bourgeois parties over unemployment insurance. This was last March. Chancellor Brüning then effected a conservative-bourgeois coalition based on the Centre, with the Social Democrats lending it a friendly neutrality. When the latter withdrew their support from his financial program in July, Chancellor Brüning invoked Article 48 of the constitution, which empowers the president of the reich to act in an emergency without a reichstag. Since then Germany has been under a constitutional dictatorship.

Chancellor Brüning's ministry presumably will disappear, as a consequence of Sunday's voting. The moderate parties will then have to choose between another coalition strong enough to withstand attacks from the Communists on the left and the Fascists on the right; and a dictatorship. The political prophets of fer no other alternative. The Communists and Fascists have combined representation in the reichstag of 183 seats. They might get some support from the German Nationalists, who have 41 members. The bourgeois parties have 206 seats and to some extent can count on at least the neutrality of the Social Democrats, who have 143 seats. Obviously the moderates could outvote the extremists if they would stand together. The difficulty is that there are 11 conservative-bourgeois groups in the reichstag, which can't easily agree among themselves or with the Social Democrats. Clearly, Germany has too many parties.

The inability of the moderates to discern in the rise of the extremists a warning sufficiently impressive to induce them to gather under a single umbrella would expose republican government in Germany to the worst storm it has experienced in its short life of scarcely more than a decade.

Ambassador Dawes did not have to go to Spain to be amazed at the cave man's art. Chicago could have shown him some that is truly astounding.

The number of young politicians determined to prove that James W. Gerard doesn't know who rules this country is simply appalling.

In this country the way of the transgressor is hard only because there is an excess of competition.

The WAY of the WORLD

NOT EVERYTHING CHANGES

Touring, one still finds a place now and then that has not gone to the "hot dogs." Plymouth, Vt., where Calvin Coolidge was born and spent his boyhood, is the same cross-roads village it was a half century or more ago. A man, sitting on the steps of the church where Calvin's father and grandfather worshipped, said: "See that cheese factory down the road? It was built 4 years ago and it is the newest thing in this village."

TOURING IN NEW ENGLAND

Henry Ford is a licensed inn keeper. In his Wayside Inn, Sudbury, Mass., Ford has beds for travelers and serves meals. Now and then he drops in to see how things are going. Here in the comfortable living room of the inn, in old days, sat Longfellow and his friends, talking late into the night with the landlord. In his "Tales of a Wayside Inn," the poet has the landlord telling the story of the midnight ride of Paul Revere.

ADVERTISING

Somebody says: "If you don't believe in advertising tell me who rode with Paul Revere?" Song and story, poetry and prose have advertised Revere and his ride to wake up the villagers in Lexington, Concord and other towns near Boston to tell them the British were coming. At least in that locality folks know that Dawes and Prescott rode with Revere. The fact is the latter was taken prisoner before he reached Concord and Prescott came on with the news.

LONGFELLOW

Some very critical persons say Longfellow was not a great poet. The majority of the American people think he was. They read him today. In this case, strange as it seems, the majority is pretty nearly right. Today thousands stop on the main street in Portland, Me., to pay money to visit the home where Longfellow lived.

ADVERTISING AGAIN

Speaking of touring—and advertising—if organizations which have goods to sell would confine what they have to say about them to newspapers and magazines they would not be depriving the traveler of the beauty of the American landscape. Every tourist—in fact everybody—should be against billboards.

LEARN THIS

If every boy and girl starting to school this fall learned but one thing during the year, the time would be well spent—if the one thing were this: you can't get something for nothing. Much of life's unhappiness and many of its tragic failures come from the futile effort to take something without being willing to pay the price.

Bo-Broadway

By JOSEPH VAN RAALTE

COMING OVER NEW YORK CITY, New York—Hannen Swaffer, the eccentric dramatic critic of London, is coming to New York, and preparations are being made to show him as good a time as he'll let anyone show him.

The Worthy Brother is not only eccentric, but he knows he's eccentric; and he's aware that half his value lies in that fact, which makes him difficult, at times, to handle.

On one occasion, when he was working for Northcliff on the old Sunday Dispatch, he said:

"Chief, there's one thing the matter with you, that, in my opinion, interferes with your success as a publisher."

"What's that, Poet?" inquired Northcliff.

"You have a submarine mind," said Hannen Swaffer.

In New York today when you call a man "Judge" you have to smile, or you're likely to get shot.

ROAD HOG At the Frank Craven show I had one of those pests on my right—an elderly man of the "intellectual" type. He was a stout gray-haired, superior sort of person, exuding a Court of Appeals air.

When the curtain went up on the prologue he leaned back exultantly, protruding a left, pudgy elbow far to leeward.

By means of a little nonchalant elbow work I my own I endeavored to make clear to him that he wasn't making a hit with me. But he ignored the gesture completely and finally I turned to him and said:

"Your elbow is sticking into my ribs."

He surveyed my graceful proportions with an air of outraged dignity and without removing his elbow replied:

"Your ribs ARE a bit prominent!"

"Be that as it may," said I. "I never permit a perfect stranger to nestle his elbow into them. I'm peculiar like that. My whole family is the same way."

He thereupon removed his elbow and for the remainder of the performance leaned ostentatiously to the right, as far as possible from me.

Not that I wanted him any closer; but his elaborate avoidance somehow spoiled my entire evening.

TAKING TO THE TALL TIMBER

DEVELOPMENTS IN ILLINOIS POINT TO AN EXCITING RACE IN CAMPAIGN FOR SENATOR

WASHINGTON.—Recent events in Illinois have put a stiff kick into the wet-and-dry issue as a factor in this autumn's senate campaign.

Ever since prohibition's advent each time an election has begun to loom some considerable distance ahead, this issue has promised to figure importantly at the polls; just as regularly, it has tended to lose its identity among a number of issues as the campaign has drawn toward its finish.

This year the controversy looked like holding its own better than usual. Nevertheless, it was beginning to blur when the sucker state fight's latest developments brought it back into sharp outline.

Illinois obviously is a highly strategic spot on the prohibition map.

In the first place, it is large, populous and influential. Secondly, it is a wet-and-dry problematic spot. It includes a huge wet city, but it also includes an extensive dry rural realm. As a state, it has gone wet on a couple of referendums, but it was when that issue happened to be fairly clean cut; it is not so certain how it would go if the prohibition question and two or three other live questions were stirred together, so as to make it difficult for the voters to sort them out.

Finally Illinois is right on the edge of the west—a region to which it is vital to the drys to lose no prestige; equally vital to the wets to score an outstanding victory, for the sake of its influence.

The drys possess a negative advantage when an election result is blurred as the wet-and-dry issue; they can say:

"Well, it is not a wet result, anyway."

If the wets cannot demonstrate that "the contrary the case, then the assumption is that the prostrate has not asked for a prohibition; the people are suited with prohibition. It is up to the wets to show affirmatively that a change is demanded. As lawyers put it, the burden of proof is on them.

The Illinois wets believed that an opportunity for an unmistakable showdown was theirs, when they nominated the out-and-out wetly Democratic Colonel James Hamilton Lewis for the senate against the out-and-out dryly Republican Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick.

There was just one fly in the wets' ointment, but a very smelly fly; the wets had to admit that her Republicanism was vastly in Mrs. McCormick's favor.

Judging from the two past referendums, the wets felt tolerably confident of the state's wetness, but it likewise has been powerfully G. O. Pish in the last half generation's elections.

The most the wets dared to claim, at the outset, was a "fighting chance" for Colonel Lewis to win. All they actually expected was that he would cut conspicuously into the Republicans' average majority.

Truth to tell, there is not much nourishment in cutting into average majorities. It has its significance to politicians, but the man in the street inquires only, "Who got elected?" and refuses even to listen if told that the victor was victorious by the barest skin of his teeth.

Then, all at once—Mrs. McCormick announced that, should she be sent to the senate, she would still a dry, she would not be too dry a senator to vote for a national prohibition referendum, provided Illinois "mandated" her to do so. It was enough of a compromise, the wets recognized, to prevent a lot of wet Republicans from deserting her for her wet Democratic rival.

This declaration's immediate effect was to take the keen edge off from the Illinois wet-and-dry fight. It would have stayed off if the state Anti-Saloon League had not presently whittled it back on again by launching Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill's candidacy as an independent dry Republican.

Opposed, solo, to Colonel Lewis, the odds emphatically were on Mrs. McCormick.

Mrs. McCormick freely proclaims that her prospects have been dimmed, seriously. Quite curiously, Colonel Lewis proclaims that his, too, have been dimmed.

Peter's Adventures

By Mrs. Florence Smith Vincent

PETER KEEPS HIS WORD

"If you soldier ants had a little more brains and a little less brawn it might be as well for you and for the rest of us," remarked a voice and Busy stood in the doorway.

"If you had put on your thinking cap, Sentry, you would have known at once that the boy must be all right or he would never have reached here in safety. As a matter of fact, he is my guest, I'm proud to say. Of course, he knows the countersign; he has been going about with me all morning. Another thing I will tell you, to make you ashamed of yourself, our guest has been playing 'mover' and has burdened himself with our load. Look at the eggs under his arms, and the eggs in his hands. He has carried twice as many as Ant could, and you have the impudence to halt him at the nursery sill. Stand aside, Sentry, and let my friend pass in."

This was a long speech from Busy. But before Peter could thank him for speaking a good word for a misunderstood guest, Sentry stepped to one side. Sentry did more—he bowed.

"Advance," said Sentry, then stretched out an antennae to bar the doorway. "Wait just a moment until I apologize," said Sentry, humbly. "I made a mistake, but I hope you'll forgive me. I only acted for the good of my tribe."

"Oh, that's all right," said Peter, and then, "Be a good sport, Sentry, and let me pass. I would like to lay the eggs down before I drop them."

Sentry jumped out of the way as though she had been shot. And at last Peter placed his precious burdens on top of a pile of eggs on the nursery floor. Peter had kept his word.

Next: "Make Way for the Queen."

Wagner slid into Senator Wadsworth's seat.

New York is not Illinois, and Wadsworth was and is much wetter than Mrs. McCormick—who continues to declare how dry she is. Still, the comparison is interesting.

To a man up a tree it seems inevitable that Colonel Lewis will get the wet Democrats and the Republicans who are wetter than they are Republican, and while he will lose the Democrats who are dryer than they are Democratic, he would lose them anyway, and he would have lost them all to Mrs. McCormick if she had remained alone against him; now he will lose part of them to Mrs. McCormick, part to Mrs. O'Neill and part to Louis Warner, an independent dry Democrat who has just entered the contest.

(Yes, Louis Warner's entry spoils the idea of the "eternal triangle"—that expression was employed merely for the sake of euphony. It really is a polygon; there are six candidates—the four already named plus Abe Lincoln Wisler, independent Republican "liberal," and C. Emmet Smith, anti-foreign entanglements—but there are no signs that Wisler and Smith will materially affect matters.)

At all events, the more the colonel's opposition is split up, the better for the colonel.

As for Mrs. McCormick—is it not reasonable to suppose that she will lose some dry Republicans to Mrs. O'Neill, for the latter is the dryer of the two; some of the dry Democrats to Louis Warner?

To be sure, even though Colonel Lewis should win, it distinctly is among the possibilities that he will win by nothing but a plurality, not by a majority over all; that Mrs. McCormick's, Mrs. O'Neill's, Louis Warner's, Abe Lincoln Wisler's and C. Emmet Smith's combined votes will exceed his.

But, as previously remarked, all the man-in-the-street wants to know is, "Who won?" He seldom concerns himself with technical details.

Moreover, it looks now like a 100 per cent wet-and-dry fight.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

By MRS. MARY MORTON

Sour Beef

Two cups water, one-half cup lemon juice, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper, one large onion, one carrot, two pounds cheap cut of beef. Cut onion in thin slices, cut carrot in strips add water, lemon juice, salt and pepper, pour over the beef and leave overnight. Drain meat, put in small agate pan, dredge meat with flour and put into hot oven until flour is brown. Add one cup of water in which meat was soaked and cover closely. Bake slowly and when half done add vegetables, drained from water, and continue the cooking, adding more liquid as needed.

When tender, remove to serving dish and thicken gravy, of which there should be one cup, with two tablespoons flour, mixed with two tablespoons cold liquid. Add, if desired, one-fourth cup sour cream. Put vegetables around the beef and serve gravy in a sauce-boat.

The lemon juice helps very much to make tough meats tender.

Blood Pressure Gauged Like Water

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

If the condition of the arteries and small blood vessels, and with that the related question of high blood pressure, is the central part of the problem of the degenerative diseases of middle age, we should all try to find out as much as is known about them.

Unfortunately this is not much. We know a great deal about what I might call the fringes of the matter, but the heart of the mystery is still unsolved.

The words "blood pressure" mean something that is quite simple. The heart, in pumping the blood around through the blood vessels of the body, must maintain a certain pressure behind it. Just as when you water your lawn with a hose there must be a certain pressure exerted to throw the water out from the nozzle of the hose. That pressure can be measured by putting a gauge over the end of the hose. And in fact, the pressure under which blood would spurt from the end of a cut artery is the blood pressure.

You can, however, measure the pressure of the water in the hose by compressing the hose at any point behind the nozzle. The amount of pressure you are compelled to exert to shut off the stream of water is the same as the pressure of the water as it comes out of the nozzle. That is the method we use of measuring human blood pressure.

We wrap a rubber bag around the arm; it is connected both with a rubber bulb and with a measuring gauge. When we squeeze the arm by means of the bulb so tight that no pulse can be felt, the gauge will measure the amount of pressure we have to use. The exact moment when the pulse disappears for a moment after being obliterated is the point which we read on the gauge as the blood pressure.

This is called the systolic blood pressure, because it is the pressure exerted at the time the heart is in systole or is in contraction. When the heart relaxes, or as we say, is in diastole, the pressure is naturally lower and is called the diastolic pressure. That also we can measure.

The normal systolic blood pressure for human beings is 120 millimeters of mercury, which means that the heart will raise a column of mercury 120 millimeters. It is usually spoken of simply as 120. The normal diastolic blood pressure of human beings is 80.

By "normal" we mean the average of a large group of people of all ages, sexes and races. The most important of these three factors is age. The blood pressure generally is low in infancy and childhood and tends to rise gradually as age advances. For a person of twenty to thirty 120 is the normal systolic blood pressure. For a person of 40 to 50, it is normally somewhat higher. In general, and allowing for certain other factors, your correct systolic blood pressure may be said to be 100 plus your age. Thus, if you are 45, your systolic blood pressure should be about 145.

Life insurance companies generally set an arbitrary limit of 160 for systolic, and 100 for the diastolic pressure. They refuse to accept candidates with higher readings than these.

What makes the blood pressure rise as age advances? Tomorrow we may discuss that question.

Stick It Out At School

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

"Dear Virginia Lee: I have been reading your column for a long time and thought I would write and see if you could answer my question."

"I have started to school and I can't get on my feet. I can't go to school for football quite a bit, and I can't go to school for many friends, so I have gotten an idea to quit school. But I can't get a job. I have been at over to get one. I don't know what to do. Either quit school or go on. Could you give me some advice? I sure would appreciate it."

"I most certainly would go to school and learn to make friends. Worried. The employment situation has been very bad, and we all hope it will gradually improve. If you don't have to take a job now it would be much more ethical to let some one have work who does need it."

And then you need the education. School means not only book learning. It means learning to make friends, to learn to play the game with others—which is part of your football training. Try to see what it is in yourself that does not attract other young people and make other fellows are popular. Try to imitate them, or at least to correct the mistakes you have been making."

And the most important thing you will gain if you make up your mind to stick to school and overcome your dislike for it, is the ability to see a thing through, even when it is disagreeable, and to get the habit of looking problems straight in the face and solving instead of running away from them. That is invaluable. All your life long you'll be glad of that attitude.

And you need as much education as you can get. You'll be eligible for better positions if you have even a high school diploma, besides being able to go to college without doing a lot of extra studying and taking special examinations.

So, on every count, stick it out, son. I KNOW you'll never be sorry.

GUILTY CONSCIENCE: My dear little girl, trying to correct your own faults and not fall into the sins of others is surely admirable. I can't see why you would have a guilty conscience because of that. You can see that your mother's temper, your sister's untidiness and your father's quietness take from their attractiveness, and so you try to remedy any tendencies in those directions you may have. Go right ahead. You will have a much more successful career if you succeed—as I'm sure you will—in making yourself an agreeable personality.

JUST ME AND AUNT LUCY: I think you should both let the boys intimate by their actions that they like you. If your friend comes to see you, Just Me, and his actions tell you that he likes you he probably does. All you can do to make him love you more is to be nice as you know how.

You gave the man the chance to come to see you and let you explain the picnic episode. Aunt Lucy. He did not take advantage of it. So possibly he is not interested. It is possible, of course, that circumstances prevented him from coming to your party. Sorry you feel so badly, and hope the young man will respond to your affection, or that you will meet someone else who will make you forget him. The other girl may feel as badly as you do now if he neglects her. May she not?

Exercises Keep Feet In Health

By GLADYS GLAD

The Indians have often been lauded for their graceful carriage, and for their free, easy swinging walk. But then, the Indians never had to combat the ill effects of poorly fashioned shoes, and unnaturally high heels. And yet, half the foot ills and defects of posture result from the mere fact that people simply do not know how to walk correctly.

Just what constitutes the correct walking position? Dr. Joseph Interland, president of the Podiatric Research association, tells us that the natural walking position is to toe in. However, the feet should not be spread at an angle. It is just as harmful to walk with the toes turned too far inward as it is to walk with the toes turned outward. The feet should point almost forward and in line with the body.

There should be a sort of rotary motion from the hips as the leg is propelled forward. The heel touches the ground slightly sooner than the toes, but the first pressure is on the outside and on the ball of the foot. When the whole foot touches the ground, the spring in the muscles lifts it up in a natural rebound and the same motion is repeated.

The feet can be kept in good condition by a few simple exercises. Stand erect, with the feet slightly apart. Lift the body on the balls of the feet. Then come down on the heels, bringing the toes up, so that the repetition of the exercise will impart a rocking motion to the frame.

As a supplementary exercise, sit on a chair with the leg extended forward, the foot hanging naturally from the ankle. In this position wiggle the toes and kick the leg slightly at the ankle. This exercise will prove beneficial to all the muscles of the foot.

Dr. Interland says that excessive weight and extreme thinness may be due to improper walking, to broken-down foot muscles.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES Height Kitty B.: Excessive smoking may prove harmful to the health. However, the growth of the body is regulated by the thyroid gland. A few cigarettes a day will not stunt your growth.

Margot: I would suggest that you part your hair on the side. Then arrange it in soft waves on the sides of the cheeks, and wear a cluster of curls at the nape of the neck. If your coloring is good, why use make-up?

Blondy: Dark circles under the eyes result from lack of sleep, or ill health. If you obtain the required eight hours of sleep each night, I would advise you to have a physician examine you.

EDITOR'S NOTE: While it is impossible for Miss Glad to answer beauty questions by mail, she will be happy to send you her pamphlets on "The New Figure" and "Beauty Culture" if you will write her, care of this paper, enclosing a self-addressed, stamped envelope and 10 cents in coin, for each, to cover cost of printing and mailing. Personal questions on beauty will be answered through Miss Glad's daily column.

CHAPTER 47

Of all the conflicts and discouragements which life can offer, few are more difficult to face and win through than a period of utter let down, of complete reversal of intention, of utter change in outlook.

Sometimes such alterations in the structure of life come from success; more often they come from failure. In neither case are they easy.

Kitty entered such a period; her whole life had to be replanned, her whole outlook changed.

She was not weak, although her character had its weaknesses. Neither had she stamina enough to put all behind her with one resolution, forget and begin anew without a pang at her heart. As with the majority, Kitty's course was a compromise.

To the best of her ability she put Gordon out of her mind. Deliberately she sought for distraction, for amusement, for occupation in spare time, which not only would not remind her of the lover who had struck her so mortal a blow, but which would put something else in the place with which she had so honored him.

She was not very successful! Gordon popped into her mind at the wrong times. He haunted her when she tried to sleep, looked at her from every passing roadster in which a rival sat beside a man, sat opposite her at every meal, unless her mind was wholly occupied with something else.

His eyes pursued her in the dark; his smile faced her on the faces of casual passers-by. And always there was the hurt wonder, the total lack of comprehension as to why!

Kitty had a normal vanity. She was not a conceited girl, but she knew she was pretty in the same way and with the same lack of egotism that she knew she could swim well, was a crack stenographer, had the knack of winning friends. It needed no conceit to tell her that Edith was no more to be compared to her in looks than Baby was to be compared to her as a swimmer.

Nor could she see, when she tried to analyze, that Edith had anything to offer in the way of mentality, education, charm, knowledge or decency which she, Kitty, could not meet and perhaps surpass.

Great as was this puzzle, however, what was worse, from her standpoint, was Gordon's lack of defense. Surely he might have thought of something, anything to say to her which would sound as if he wanted to make a defense!

But he had said not a word. That Gordon had not understood her she never thought. How could he help but understand her? That Tuesday night stood out in her mind as the greatest shock, the worst hour, the most terrible moment of her life. Her lover—in another woman's arms!

Of course he couldn't have known that she was there; doubtless he thought himself so well concealed from the world that it was impossible for him to believe any one could trace him to Edith's home. But Kitty had told him in so many words that she had seen and heard for herself. All he had said was something about a murderer being heard in his own defense!

He didn't defend himself, then, because there was no defense! Well, he was "rid of her." She would never trouble him again. He could marry Edith whenever he was ready. Kitty's head went up in the air and her firm chin grew more determined. Nor would she go about the world with a lagging step and a broken heart. There were other men in the world—men as good and better than Gordon! Not that she wanted a man—heaven, no! She had had enough of men, she told herself, to last her the rest of her life! For young women do argue that way, never understanding that the terrible hurt heart can heal with time and that even the purest and the greatest love, spurned, can be smothered and put away.

Perhaps it never dies, but it can be put to sleep, lulled with anodynes, hypnotized with diversions, paralyzed with gaiety.

Kitty proceeded to "enjoy herself"—so she termed it to herself—as much and as rapidly as she could.

"I'll go out! I'll dance!" she cried to herself fiercely. "I'll not waste a tear on him; I don't want him! I wouldn't have him for a gift! She is more than welcome to him! Why, then, act as if I were a dead woman? I will be gay!"

Kitty celebrated her gaiety and happiness by breaking down again, in the privacy of her bedroom, and crying, crying, crying—

A knock on her door. "Wanted on the phone, Miss Wilcox!" came her landlady's voice.

Kitty dashed water on her face, wiped her eyes and hid her face in her handkerchief as she went to the public phone in the hallway.

"Yes? Yes, this is Kitty. Oh, yes, Allee! No, I'd rather not—wait a minute!"

Allee wanted to see her! He wanted her to go somewhere and dance! Strange, that he should ask at this moment—"Yes!" she called into the telephone. "I'll go, gladly, Allee! At eight-thirty? I'll be ready!"

Kitty turned away from the phone, her heart saying "There, Mr. Platt!" as if he were present. She did not think it out, but there was something of a childish revenge in the thought that she was to spend an evening with the man who hated Gordon. Previously she had wondered, regretted, felt sorry for this feeling between the man with the "good" face and the man she loved. Now it was a source of satisfaction.

For just a moment a shred of dismay clouded Kitty's mind; Allee was a man who had offered her his suit. Yet she was going out with him. True, he had apologized. He had offered her the greatest compliment—asked her to marry him. And for him, for a few short weeks, she had felt a great attraction.

"I don't care!" she stormed at herself. "I've forgiven him! I will go, I tell you!" she ended to herself, at the protest of some finer part of her, deep in a very sore heart. "I will go, and I hope I see Gordon, Platt, and he sees me. Oh, if I could just do to him what he once did to me—look him in the face and not recognize him!"

Kitty dressed in her prettiest. She spent more time than usual on her face. Ordinarily a little rouge, a touch of lip stick, a dab of powder, and a fresh and rosy countenance looked back at her from the mirror. But now that rosy face was pale, circles showed under the big eyes, even the dimple seemed weak and small. The strain of the last week had been terrific, both mentally and physically. Kitty was worn out, and refused to recognize it. So she creamed and rubbed powdered and rouged, and smoothed and penciled with real care, that Allee find nothing in her cheeks to make him think that underneath was a sick heart wearing the willow!

He called for her promptly on time. As Kitty got into the taxi she had a swift glance at him under the street lamp. A sudden memory made her heart flutter a moment; the lips that had twice kissed her—once in a taxi and once at the swimming pool in the darkness, were as red, as well formed, as attractive a cupid's bow as ever.

Thoughts, say the philosophers, are things, as truly as are chairs and tables. Thoughts, once admitted to the mind, may clutter it up and cause confusion as truly as an extra piece of furniture in a familiar room. The unwanted chair may be put in a corner; the unwanted thought may be relegated to the background, yet both are there until removed by force.

"I wonder if I'll object if Allee kisses me!" was the thought which was a thing, cluttering Kitty's mind as she settled into the seat beside him.

The Theater

Disturbing news comes from Hollywood where Milton Sills, one of the important and distinguished actors of the screen is dead and Mrs. Noah Beery, wife of the well-known character actor, is reported missing.

Just a few weeks ago tragedy darkened the doors of Hollywood by snatching Lon Chaney, master character actor star from life. Now Sills, another veteran of the celluloid drama, joins him on the other side.

If Milton Sills had not preferred the stage, he would have been a great educator now. Born in Chicago, he showed an aptitude for his studies and after graduating from the University of Chicago, became a graduate student and in-

will make the Delaware senatorial contest in November a direct battle over prohibition, since Senator Daniel O. Hastings, Republican, is dry and is running on a dry plank.

In Ohio, the Democrats adopted a state platform free of prohibition utterances. This was regarded as a victory for the dries, since Robert J. Bulkley, a dripping wet of Cleveland, won the senatorial nomination in the primaries last month. The platform really compromised the views of Bulkley and George White, a dry, who won the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

In New York, where congressional nominations headed the list, both wets and dries were victorious. It appeared that the Republican and Democratic organizations nominated their favorites, regardless of their views on prohibition. The dries however were comforted by the fact that some of their outstanding New York representatives, including James S. Parker in the twenty-ninth district, and Frank Crowther in the thirtieth district, won against wets. In New York City, though, the wets were uniformly successful.

Aside from the primary and convention results, the wets were gleeful over two other developments in the war over prohibition. In New York City, U. S. Attorney Charles H. Tuttle promptly declared for repeal of prohibition. Out in Chicago, Rep. Fred A. Britten, a wet Republican, was assured of re-election when his Democratic opponent, Thomas Rohan, withdrew from the race. Rohan said he wanted to see Britten win.

The wets seemed to have gained ground in the primary contests. They held their own in Massachusetts, New York and Wisconsin, but scored victories in Connecticut and Delaware. They also added Massachusetts and Delaware to the states in which prohibition will be a paramount issue in the senatorial elections next November.

BOSTON, Sept. 17.—Former United States Senator William M. Butler, "dry" and member of the so-called Old Guard of the G. O. P., defeated Eben S. Hopedale textile manufacturer, for the Republican nomination for United States senator by a margin of approximately 9,700 votes, according to latest figures today.

In event that Butler's margin is extremely close indications were that Draper supporters would ask for recounts in several cities.

Meanwhile, Republican leaders were reported impressed by the "wet" strength in their party in Massachusetts.

Latest figures gave: Butler 136,564; Draper 126,812 with three score scattered election precincts missing.

Mayor Andrew J. "Bossy" Gillis, the so-called "bad boy" mayor of Newburyport, had only 18,976 votes.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 17.—Lieutenant Governor Ernest E. Rogers of New London will oppose Dr. Wilbur L. Cross of Yale in the general election for governor of Connecticut. Rogers was named yesterday by Connecticut Republicans.

A plank was adopted in the platform expressing dissatisfaction with prohibition but outright repeal, as demanded by the Democratic party last week, was not asked.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 17.—Philip F. La Follette, son of the late United States Senator "fighting Bob" La Follette, won the Republican party nomination for governor by a plurality which will exceed 100,000, the tabulation of returns indicated today.

La Follette defeated Gov. Walter J. Kohler, millionaire manufacturer by a margin which may reach 105,000 votes.

In 2,300 out of 2,824 precincts the vote stood: La Follette, 310,233; Kohler, 208,672.

10. Favor continuance of progressive or stage type of construction of rural highways, as well as extension of hard surface roads.

11. Condemn suppression of free ballot. (This plank directed at Clarence Brown, Republican secretary of state, for his ruling against the Citizens' party ticket in Hamilton County).

12. Pledge vigorous handling of graft and corruption.

13. Favor national legislation against mob action and lynching, and protection of rights of colored citizens.

14. Star Gazing BY RADIE HARRIS

By Central Press HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 17.—Mitzie Green is proof of the adage that "all good things come in small packages."

Is the only film actress who does not object to seeing her real age published. Was born October 22, 1920, in Flushing, Long Island. Still has home there.

Christened "Mitzie" in honor of Mitzie Hajos, the star of the show in which her parents, "Keno and Green," were appearing before her birth.

Gave her first impression at the age of three when she did an impersonation of Sadie Burt, a vaudeville artist on the same bill with her parents. Has been "impressing" people ever since.

Had only seen Moran and Mack twice when at the age of seven, she astounded audiences all over the country with her perfect impersonation of them.

"Studied" Maurice Chevalier when she had the chicken pox and her mother bought her his record of "Louise" to help entertain her.

Played Vaudeville in Los Angeles when a Paramount scout signed her for part in "The Marriage Playground." In a single year has already appeared opposite practically every player on the Paramount lot—and often way ahead of them.

Has always been a movie fan. Used to write voluminously to all the stars but stopped with the demand for quarters. Her favorites were Clara Bow, Nancy Carroll and Joan Crawford. Are now Mary Brian, Regis Toomey, Jack Oakie and Maurice Chevalier.

Gets a big kick out of her fan mail. Reads every letter and is saving all of them along with her clippings in a big scrap book. Expects to re-read them in her "old age"—when she is 21 or thereabouts.

Her most ardent "public" is her grandmother. Sees all of her pictures at least eight times and thinks that any magazine that doesn't boast at least a snap of her should be burned before publication.

Is driven to the studio every day by her father in the family Ford. During the making of "Tom Sawyer" gave Jackie Coogan a "break" by riding home with him in his Rolls Royce. P. S. The friendship is "purely platonic"—despite the Rolls.

Studies Daily Devotes a few hours each day to her lessons. Likes spelling but detests arithmetic. Which may explain why she has never been able to count the freckles on her nose.

Has read "Alice in Wonderland," "Tom Sawyer," "Peter Pan," "Babes in Toyland," and all the Oz books. Doesn't like mystery stories or pictures. Couldn't sleep alone in a room for three months after seeing "The Cat and the Canary."

Notes on miniature golf, chewing gum, horseback riding, rare meat, working on a picture, her little cat, "Tinker," dressing up in her mother's clothes, adores pearl necklaces and her 15-year-old brother, Harry.

Hates candy, going to the dentist, anything jellied, and being mistaken for Harry Green's little girl.

Claims that the penalty of being an actress is the sacrifice of one's friends. Corresponds with eight little girls in Flushing, but finds it most unsatisfactory because there is nothing she can talk to them about anymore.

Is one of the few females in Hollywood who uses roller skates for rolling skating.

DOCTORS CONTINUE INVESTIGATION OF PARALYSIS CASES

Infantile paralysis which has been prevalent in Greene County recently is now under control, according to members of a commission of Greene County doctors, appointed by Dr. H. C. Messenger, president of the Greene County Medical Association, to make a special investigation of the malady in the county.

The commission held a brief meeting Sunday morning but was unable to announce anything definite. It will continue to investigate the cases in order to try to determine what was the direct cause of the disease here. At present there are six cases of the disease, four in Beavercreek Twp., and the other two in other parts of the county. Belief that the disease is checked is based on the fact no new cases have been reported for several days.

Members of the commission appointed by Dr. Messenger to make a study of infantile paralysis are: Dr. T. F. Myler, Xenia; Dr. R. L. Haines, Xenia; Dr. W. T. Ungard, Xenia; Dr. P. B. Wingfield, Yellow Springs and Dr. R. H. Grube, health commissioner of Greene County.
